What to bring and what to wear:

Two liters of water per person and plenty of food. If you are doing a multi-pitch you should have snacks with you, and something in your pack to eat when get down.

Clothing that's both functional and flexible is your key to a comfortable climbing day. Adjust your choices according to season. In cooler weather exercise-type tights have become popular. Loose-fitting pants or sweats are also appropriate. (Don't wear tight jeans!) For the upper body a few light layers, along with a wind-breaker and water resistant shell. Summer days can turn surprisingly cold with clouds moving in and winds picking up. If it's cool enough, a ski-type hat and gloves, and layers incase it the temperature drops. In hot summer weather, bicycle-type or walking shorts are appropriate. (Running shorts are not a good idea!) A T-shirt or tank-top is recommended.

Bring thin socks for your climbing shoes. Wear sneakers or trail shoes for walking around. Leave your flip flops and high heels at home.

Bring a light lunch and lots of water, at least 2 liters per person in hot weather. Insect repellent and sun screen are useful when conditions indicate. Put everything in a day pack or knapsack. You won't actually climb with the pack on your back, it's just the most convenient way to carry your things from place to place.
